Loyola/SGWU ad campaign

If you've been reading Montreal newspapers this month you will have seen the first joint advertising by Loyola and Sir George.

The ads, which have appeared in the Montreal Star and Gazette, are one of the first joint public ventures by the institutions.

Under the banner of "Loyola — Sir George Williams Together" they attempt to answer the most fequently asked questions about the new University.

The series of five advertisements, which will be run over a period of two months, deal with enrolment, student affairs, student government, academic diversity and academic unification.

They point out that while the two institutions are joining, the individual campuses will retain their individuality.

Campus Centre signed over

Loyola's long awaited Campus Centre is becoming a reality. Construction is underway on the three storied, 23,000 square feet building which is scheduled for completion in July.

Last week Loyola Students Association president Peter Fedele and Evening Students Association head Jim Conway signed an agreement with Loyola President, the Very Reverend Patrick G. Malone, outlining the operation of the Campus Centre.

In the agreement the college acknowledged the "considerable contributions" of alumni and past student administrations. Students are responsible for half of the estimated $600,000 cost of constructing the Centre.

After the signing, Fr. Malone complemented both the day and evening students' associations on their cooperation in the planning of the Centre. He told them that the building, the first to go up on campus in six years, "is a vital resource for a metropolitan area school".

The Campus Centre is being built immediately north of the Vanier Library on land that was once the site of the college tennis courts, and for the past few years used as a car park. A student initiated project, its primary function is to provide an environment responding to the growing needs of Loyola's student community.

Intended to promote interaction among students in an informal setting, the Centre will house facilities for relaxation, eating and recreation. The main floor will have a large cafeteria with adjoining "pub" area; the second floor two separated lounge areas, and the ground floor games and hobby rooms.

Although owned by the college, the Centre will be run by a Board of Directors comprised of day and evening students and one college appointee. The Loyola student body will be responsible for financing the Centre's day-to-day operation. The building is expected to be in full operation by next September.

Project bridges gap

This month will see several Loyola alumni who have gone on to high posts in the Montreal business world back in the classroom at the college.

They are returning to the campus under a project developed by alumni and students. Titled Bridges, its aim is to create a better two way understanding in their field. They will follow the student's regular routine: attending classes, meetings, student events, and lunching in the student cafeteria.

In return they will have the student back to their offices for a day, exposing him to the working life he may lead when he finished college. On both days the accent will be on the normal day-to-day events in the hope that both parties can gain a true picture of how the other works.

Businessmen participating in the project include Charles Phelan, '48, W. H. Wilson Jr., '53, Kevin Reynolds, '49, Stanley Clarke, '38, Donald McNaughton, '49, Paul McDonald, '59 and Bill Pelton, '48.

Basil Holland chairs Steppingstones '73

Basil Holland, '59, head of the Theology Department at John XXIII High School, has accepted the Chairmanship of Steppingstones '73. The annual event brings Alumni out to talk to students about various professions.

As a Loyola student, Baz, was one of the foremost exponents of Ernest Hemingway. He had a flair for writing and acting and gave many enjoyable moments to fellow-students, parents, and alumni in print and on the stage.

During his eight year stay at Loyola High School and Loyola College, Baz participated in bowling, debating, drama productions, and the carnivals. He wrote for the News for four years and was a contributor to the Loyola Review and Amphora. He was Arts Society Secretary in 1956-57 and Vice-President and Secretary of the Sodality.

Baz received an M.A. in English from the University of Montreal and has been teaching for the past twelve years. He is a course leader at the Thomas More Institute. A resident of Montreal West, he is married and has two young children.

Members of the Alumni Board, who will be assisting Baz, are Mrs. Linda Shesko, '68, and Dick Riendeau, '54. Gerry Gallagher, '44, is an advisor to the committee. Another alumnus who expected to play a prominent role in the project, Ross Brady, '64, unfortunately has been transferred to Toronto by his employer, the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce.

Steppingstone '73 will be held in March. The locale and the dates will be announced in the very nearfuture.

This marks the third year that the Alumni Board has provided students with an opportunity to listen to and question prominent guest speakers, and get to know some alumni a little hetter.

Let's face it, students and alumni at Loyola have been strangers to one another for a long time. Yet most alumni have very definite ideas about current students, and the majority of students think they know what Loyola alumni are really like.

In too many instances those pictures are of unflattering and inaccurate stereotypes that don't even come close to the real thing. The situation is an injustice to both parties, and the Alumni Board, in the past few years, has thought the time ripe to open up direct communication between students and alumni.

Steppingstones '73 is merely one Alumni Board aimed at and for students, however it is most important and worthwhile. Under the direction of Baz Holland and his committee, it promises to be successful.

A place for photography

It started quietly in October last year and has quickly grown into one of the more stimulating spots at Loyola. Yet it is virtually unknown to most of the Loyola community.

The place is The Workshop, an upper duplex at 7308 Sherbrooke West (just west of the Cloran Building), that is available to anyone interested in photography and silkscreening.

For Loyola alumni, faculty or staff members, students or local residents, The Workshop offers two fully equipped photography darkrooms and exhibiting space. Silkscreening printing facilities are due to be installed in the near future.

The Workshop was conceived as a place where an individual whatever his degree of involvement in the visual arts, might pursue his interestand at a minimum cost to himself, have access to the best possible equipment. The Workshop supplies most of the chemicals needed. The only items not provided are photographic paper and film developer: these are left up to the photographer's personal preference.

Some people regard photography as a full-time preoccupation, while others approach it as a leisurely pastime; The Workshop tries to accomodate the different approaches by providing efficient working conditions. There is opportunity for viewing each other's work, discussion, and general exchange of points of view. In this way, the hobby photographers and the "semi-professional" have something to offer each other.

Major credit for The Workshop goes to Charles Gagnon, Loyola's Artist-in-Residence, who persuaded the college to finance a studio where students would be free to experiment with the visual arts. Although sponsored by Loyola, The Workshop is not affiliated with an academic department.

The Workshop is open on Mondays, 2:00 P.M. - 10:00 P.M., and 10:00 A.M. - 10:00 P.M. on Tuesdays, Wednesdays, Thursdays, and Fridays.

Loyola's first woman chaplain enters a previously all-male domain

A few years ago the word nun, to most people, was synonymous with a picture of an unworldly 'habitted' woman shielded from the harshness and vulgarity in the world. Times have changed and with them the image of the nun. The new sisterhood has broken with traditions and exposed itself to the realities of everyday life in an effort to serve a meaningful role in the society of the 70's.

Exemplifying the progressive nun is Loyola's first female chaplain, Sister Clare O'Neill, C.N.D. (Congregation de Notre Dame). A straightforward woman, whose easy nature and enthusiasm have warmed many hearts since she arrived on campus last fall, she is one half of the new two person team directing the Campus Ministry house at 3550 Belmore. Her fellow director is co-chaplain Bob Gaudet and the third college chaplain is Father Charlie Pottie who came to Loyola in 1971.

Sister Claire with co-chaplain Charlie Pottie

Sister Clare O'Neill's three brothers are graduates of Loyola: Rev. Jack O'Neill, S.J., '49, for many years the Chaplain at Loyola College and now Chaplain at Ignatius College, Guelph, Ontario; Brian, '49, a National Hockey League executive, and Paul, '50. Their father, the late Stanford O'Neill, is a former Manager of the Loyola Bookstore.

It was the student's easy acceptance of her that was Sister Clare's only shock at Loyola. "I just couldn't believe how matter-of-factly I was accepted," she mused. One girl summed it up by saying, "It's more natural now, more like a family."

Being the first and trying something new is becoming a familiar pattern for Sister Clare. Just this year she, together with seven other sisters of her order, moved out of their convent and into a three family home, already housing two other families, in Ville Lasalle. It's a house like any other in the area and the eight women rent the first floor and basement, "We all wanted to live more simply and move into a community dimension," she explained. She's not talking about doing social work when she talks about community, but rather she means living as the ordinary citizen lives.

WARRIORS' CLUB

Regular use of the Loyola gymnasium and discounts from several Montreal sporting goods stores have been negotiated for members of the fast growing Warriors' Club.

During winter the gym is available Sundays from 2:00 p.m. to 4:00 p.m. Equipment for badminton, table tennis, basketball and volleyball can be obtained from the Athletic Complex offices upon presentation of Warriors' Club membership cards.

Weight training and exercise rooms at the complex are also available to members during the same Sunday hours, which will exist until April.

From May 1st the Club will hold a weekly structured fitness program directed by an exercise consultant. Sessions will be on Tuesdays from 5:30 p.m. Following the formal program the gym and exercise rooms will be free for use by members.

Fitness Conference

Members of the Warriors' Club who are fitness buffs, are invited to attend a fitness conference scheduled for Friday and Saturday, April 13 and 14, at the Lethbridge Center, on de Maisonneuve Blvd. (just east of the Loyola Campus). A joint venture by the Lethbridge Center and Bio-Physical Education Department of Loyola, the conference should prove interesting and rewarding.

Initially the program is scheduled to run through August, but if interest warrants, a year-round program will be planned. Incidentally for those who can not make the 5:30 p.m. sessions, the gym and exercise rooms will also be available during the day over the summer months.

Wilson's Sports Centre, at 6536 Somerled, N.D.G., and 293 St. Johns, Pointe Claire, are welcoming Club members with a 20% discount off all sporting goods with the exception of bicycles and merchandise already at team and/or sale prices.

Joey Richman Sporting Goods Ltd., 1487 MacDonald in St. Laurent, and Regal Trading Company Ltd., 3510 Boulevard St. Laurent, are offering discounts. The Regal list includes sporting goods, camping supplies, gift wares, electrical appliances, cameras, photo supplies, leather goods, bar supplies, cutlery and trophies.

If you are interested in becoming a member of the Warriors' phone 482-0320 Local 402. An application form will be sent. Cost of membership is $10.00.
